

THESE ARE THE arches of the Stone Bridge which has carried the commerce of the nation for nearly a century, and in the two great wars, shuttled the men and the weapons from east and west. Under its arches have ridden two U. S. presidents, Teddy Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy; from its keystones have hung effigies in athletic rivalries; and under its arches have been sheltered "winos" and broken down autos, yet with all the bridge Bellaire's pride and joy as a vic landmark.

2