WHAT TO LOOK FOR IN FOOTBALL

a game, but the officials must know them minutely.

Here are a few tips for watching something else besides the ball:

The best way to study line play is to pick out an individual lineman and observe his activities. The end, for example, has more complex assignments than any other lineman.
On an off-tackle play he and the halfback may "team" on the defensive tackle. He is usually the receiver or a decoy receiver on a pass play.
He is expected to be down-field under punts to prevent a return by the opposing safety man. He may be drawn into the backfield to carry the ball on an end-around play, or to run interference for the ball-carrier. Defensively he may be expected to stop or break up the interference of plays designed to flank him, to "rush the passer" to aid in breaking up a pass attack, to watch the flat zones for

There is too much in football for one man to try to see it all.

Football is admittedly a complex game. It is possibly the only sport that requires four officials to administer a game.

Most average spectators solve the problem in the easiest way, by watching the progress of the ball and taking pretty much for granted the action of the ten other players on the attacking team and the eleven other players on the defensive team. Such a procedure in itself is thrilling, or the stadia of the nation wouldn't be packed Saturday after Saturday during the fall. But there's much more to see in football than the football.

A football spectator's appreciation of the difficulties under which officials labor would be greatly enhanced by a brief skimming of the complex body of rules of the game; a spectator may know only a few of them to get a reasonable amount of enjoyment out of

TONNAGE OR TOUCHDOWNS

Tonnage wins wars;

Touchdowns win games.

We've teamed up with the Big Reds for the duration . . . We'll do our part, the boys will do theirs.
Let's have both victories by the end of the season!

flat passes or laterals behind the line of scrimmage.

The work of the end, however, is only one phase of line play, and the performance of the tackles, guards and centers is equally worth watching.

When the ball is snapped to the ball-carrier, shift your attention to the action of the other players. Does interference form in front of him? Do linemen—the guards or tackles—"pull out" of the line to join the backs in blocking? It's quite likely to develop into

Or do the ends race down the field? If so, it's either a kick or a pass. The action of the other ten players may very often give you a key to what the ball-carrier is going to do long before his intentions become obvious to the other spectators. Remember that the clever ball-carrier is an actor; he attempts to "sell a bill" to the defense that he will do one thing, then does another. But you, sitting high in the stands and untroubled by the cares that plague the defense, can guess his plans long before they are obvious to the defensive player on the field—not by watching him, but by watching someone else!

Even some of the folks who keep up with all the latest radio and newspaper news and mark lines of military strategy on tablecloths get a little behind on their Bond buying now and then. They are getting used to War Bond booths by now and that first fever of Bond buying that came after Pearl Harbor is running a little low. They can read a list of casualties or men captured by the Japs and Germans without that impending urge to do something! Yet each time it's a different boy and a different mother to suffer heartaches. So, let's not fall down on the job. Come in and buy not only your pledged 10% but dig down deep and buy an extra War Bond this week.

PHYSIOLOGY PLAYS ITS PART

Football games aren't always won on the football field.

Because human emotions play such a large part in the gridiron sport, games seemingly hopelessly lost have been turned into victories by coaches who "said the right thing at the right time."

The famous Knute Rockne of Notre Dame, Percy Haughton while at Harvard, and Amos Alonzo Stagg during his long tenure at Chicago, all experienced the thrill of seeing their teams roar out on the field with half the battle won because of their mental attitude. All three coaches had the ability to "say the right thing at the right time."

One of the shortest, between-halves "fight talks" on record is credited to Rockne. His Notre Dame team was playing miserable football and just couldn't seem to make anything work in the first half of their game with an important foe.

At the end of the half, Rockne walked into the dressing room, surveyed his players with a look of withering scorn and with a roar that shook the room, said "Fighting Irish!—Bah!" With that he stalked out of the room. Yes, Notre Dame came back to win in the second half.

While Stagg was at Chicago, the scout of an opposing team said to him, "Is that Irishman still playing with you? There's a lemon if I ever saw one."

Stagg saved the remark until the week of the game with the team in question. The "Big Irishman," who was not up to par in practice, was called over by Stagg, and the latter said, "I guess you're just what Coach———says you are—a lemon."

The "Big Irishman" stopped Stagg on the street the next day and said, "Coach, if you let me play Saturday, I'll show that coach whether I'm a lemon or not."

Led by the "Big Irishman," Stagg's team won on the next Saturday.

HAUGHTON ON PSYCHOLOGY

Before a game with Yale, Percy Haughton had trouble calming down his squad. They were so nervous and wrought up that they were unable to do their best out on the football field.

Haughton strode up and down the dressing room several times and then in a soothing conversational tone addressed his players. "Now you men know what you can accomplish and you know what I hope you'll do. I know that you'll do your best. I'm not worrying about that. And now, go out there and God bless every one of you." Harvard won.

Yes, saying "the right thing at the right time," has changed the aspect of many an important football game.
