Good Luck, Kevin

There is an old saying stating there are only two sure things in life, death and taxes. Like everything else in these times of change, we need to update this tired old cliché to include two other sure things — namely, the inevitable emergence of the pesty seventeen-year locust bugs and the annual emergence of Harold Hugemouth, Super Fan and grandstand coach of this year and every year!

In order to enjoy watching a game, it is necessary for an individual to be able to identify "Super Fan" as quickly as possible, so as to be able to sit as far away from him as space permits. Even though Harold Hugemouth comes in various shapes and sizes, he is really very easy to recognize because of the one singular distinguishing characteristic that pinpoints him immediately. You simply follow the loudest sound you hear until you see a mouth, surrounded by obnoxious abrasiveness. No question about it, you've spotted him.

He lives in Every Community, USA and his one purpose in life seems to be to criticize athletic teams in general and coaches in particular. This individual usually goes into semi-retirement during the summer months in order to allow his lungs to recuperate from a long and tiring campaign of critical evaluation; Those long schedules make it tough on the old boy since he involves himself in every play and every situation of every game he attends, but alas, his recuperative powers are marvelous! And, as a new school year approaches with the exciting possibilities of new "targets" to feed upon, Harold Hugemouth begins to sit with eager anticipation as visions of fumbles, blocked punts, missed foul shots and turnovers dance through his head; it will be a glorious year, and rest assured, our number one fan will be ready!

The prerequisite for obtaining a "license" to practice as a full-fledged Super Fan is simple. He simply purchases one (commonly called a ticket) at the athletic window and presto — an instant authority is born with full rights and privileges of castigating young men and their coach!

Make no mistake about it, no athlete or coach is immune from Harold Hugemouth and there is absolutely no way that he can ever be satisfied with the game, the players, or the coaching. No player in the game is as tough, skillful, aggressive, fast or as clever as H.H. was in his day; no team is as spirited, rugged, well-coached or imbued with as much of the old "fighting spirit" as were the ones in his day; and it is plain to see, or rather hear, that Super Fan has forgotten more about coaching than that "dolt" on the sidelines will ever know.

When it comes to the coach, this is where Harold the mouth really comes alive! All his frustrations, pet peeves, and viciousness roll forth in an unending stream of vocal abuse toward that incompetent character on the sideline sometimes known as "coach." It makes no difference that the coach's wife and children are within hearing distance (who isn't?), and even though they try to ignore the criticism, it hurts. But, according to Super Fan, he paid his money and a coach is fair game — after all, isn't he responsible for everything that happens to the team during the game? The criticisms run the whole gamut from the uniforms to the pre-game warm-ups, the game itself and of course, the final score. No matter what occurs during a game, it should have been better and would have been if the coach were really competent. But that guy — you can't tell him anything! The real "Proof of the Pudding" though, is told by the scoreboard. And, if "Our" team is on the short end of the score, that simply proves what Super Fan has been saying right along — this coach is a bum and he's got to go.

The saddest part of Harold Hugemouth's performance, though, is the part he saves for the player. When a player makes a mistake, and he will, this becomes an unforgivable sin that takes on catastrophic proportions in Super Fan's little mind and he never fails to rise to the occasion. He loudly challenges his such an inept individual to stay on the team — let alone play in a game — all at the same time and without pausing for a breath. It's an incredible performance and one that has obviously been honed to a fine pitch through years of practice and dedication to a labor of love! It makes no difference to H. H. that these are young men simply playing a game the best they can. Nonsense, this game will probably change the course of the world and as a result, Super Fan demands perfection. After all, he never made any mistakes.

Harold Hugemouth, Super Fan, Super Critic... who needs him?

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR PARENTS OF ATHLETIC CHILDREN

Here are some golden rules, the Ten Commandments for parents of Athletic Children.

1 Make sure that your child knows that — win or lose, scared or heroic — you love him, appreciate his efforts and are not disappointed in him.

This will allow him to do his best, to avoid developing a fear of failure based on the spectre of disapproval and family disappointment if he does mess up.

2 Be the person in his life he can look to for constant positive enforcement. Learn to hide your feelings if he disappoints you. Try your best to be completely honest about your child's athletic capability, his competitive attitude, his sportsmanship and his actual skill level.

3 Be helpful but don't "coach" him on the way to the track, diamond or court. . . . on the way back. . . . at breakfast. . . . and so on. Sure, it's tough no to, but it's a lot tougher for the child to be inundated with advice, pep talks and often critical instruction.

4 Teach him to enjoy the thrill of competition, to be "out there trying" to be working to improve his skills and attitudes. . . . to take the physical bumps and come back for more. Don't say "winning doesn't count" because it does. Instead, help him develop the feel for competing, for trying hard, for having fun.

5 Try not to re-live your athletic life through your child in a way that creates pressure; you tumbled, too, you lost as well as won. You were frightened, you backed off at times, you were not always heroic. Don't pressure him because of your pride. Sure, he is an extension of you, but let him make his own voyage of discovery into the world of sport. . . . let him sail into it without interference. Help to calm the water when things get stormy, but let him handle his own navigational problems.

6 Find out what he is all about and don't assume he feels the way you did, wants the same things, has the same attitudes. You gave him life, now let him learn to handle it, enjoy it. Let him need you on his terms — don't help him to death. Athletic children need their parents, so you must not withdraw. Just remember there is a thinking, feeling, sensitive, free spirit out there in that uniform who needs a lot of understanding, especially when his world turns bad on him.

7 If he is comfortable with you — win or lose — he's on his way to maximum achievement and enjoyment — and you will get your kicks too!

8 In the meantime, start to think of your child as a child, not as "my son, the athlete" or "my daughter, the athlete!" If you do, the morale of the family will greatly improve.

9 Don't compete with the coach. The young athlete often comes home and chatters on about "coach says this, coach says that," and nauseum. This, I realize, is often hard to take — especially for the father who has had some sports experience or for the mother if what the "coach says" refers to the youngster's eating pattern.

10 When a certain degree of disenchantment about the coach sets in, some parents side with the youngster and are happy to see him shot down. This is a mistake. It should provide a chance to discuss (not lecture) with the youngster the importance of learning how to handle problems, react to criticism and understand the necessity for discipline, rules, regulations and so on.

SPECIAL

TO ALL "STATS"
PAST * PRESENT * FUTURE

—by Lloyd Percival

To me the coaching job the parent has is the toughest one of all and it takes a lot of effort to do it well. It is worth all the effort when you hear your youngster boast (now or later on) that you played a key role in his success.

In a way, the parents are the primary coaches. I have talked with many great athletes who, in evaluating the reasons for their success, have said: "My parents really helped—I was lucky in this respect."

Above all, don't over-react and rush off to the coach if you feel an injustice has been done. Investigate, but anticipate that the problem is not as it might appear. Make a point of understanding courage, and the fact that it is relative. There are different kinds of courage. Some of us can climb mountains but are afraid to get into fights; others can fight without fear but turn to jelly if a bee approaches. Everyone is frightened in certain areas—nobody escapes fear and that is just as well since it often helps us avoid disaster. Explain to your youngster that courage does not mean an absence of fear but rather means doing something in spite of fear or discomfort.

9
Always remember that children tend to exaggerate, both when praised and criticized. Temper your reactions to the tales of woe or heroes they bring home. Don't cut your youngster down if you feel he is exaggerating—just take a look at the situation and gradually try to develop an even level.

8
You should also get to know the coach so that you can be assured that his philosophy, attitudes, ethics and knowledge are such that you are happy to expose your child to him. The coach has a tremendous potential influence.

7
Don't compare the skill, courage or attitudes of your child with that of other members of the squad or team, at least in his hearing. And if your child shows the tendency to resent the treatment he gets from the coach, or the approval other members get, be careful to talk over the facts quietly and try and provide fair and honest counsel. If you play the role of the overly-protective parent who is blinded to the relative merits of your youngster and his actual status as an athlete and individual, you will merely perpetuate the problem. Your youngster could become a problem athlete.
